Riddle in a Bottle WINS at BLUE Ocean Film Festival

The Save our Seas Foundation is proud to announce that Sisbro studios was awarded the Best of Children’s Programming Award for its film The Riddle in a Bottle at the Blue Ocean Film Festival in Savannah, Georgia last week.

With over 200 ocean-related film entries from around the world, this is an extremely high accolade and put Riddle on the world stage. The Riddle in a Bottle defeated several high-quality children's programs, including Dugong and Din, from Animal Planet and Off the Fence. Other award winners included ocean explorers and filmmakers Fabien and Celine Cousteau and world-renowned scientist, author, oceanographer and ocean activist Dr. Sylvia Earle.

The BLUE Ocean Film Festival is the first industry film festival and awards competition in the United States that is dedicated to the oceans, and the winners represent one of the greatest collections of ocean films in the world. Walt Disney Studios’ DisneyNature opened the festival with a screening of its first theatrical release, EARTH.

“To be in the company of so many incredible filmmakers and ocean experts was humbling and thrilling,” says the award winner Robert Sams. Robert dedicated the film to his grandmother, who was the voice of the loggerhead sea turtle in the movie and who recently passed away. Saying, “She was a beautiful, intelligent and witty lady who truly loved the ocean and all its wonders.”

The Save Our Seas Foundation supports conservation, awareness, research and education projects focused on the need to protect our world’s oceans. It aims to inspire people to appreciate the intricate nature of how we are all bound to the health of the sea. Teaching the children of today to be custodians of our marine world tomorrow, it implores to every generation to act now and make a difference. The Riddle in a Bottle is a perfect example of how film can create awareness and encourage children to love the marine environment.
